

Clancy Moore is the Chief Executive Officer of Transparency International Australia overseeing a global mining programme operating in more than 20 countries to improve transparency and accountability across the value chain. This includes addressing corruption risks in the licensing phase and promoting good governance of the energy transition.

Clancy has almost 20 years' experience in international development advocacy, including leading the Publish What You Pay coalition in Australia and working with INGOs whilst living in resource rich countries such as Myanmar, Brazil and the Solomon Islands. He regularly represents civil society in the media, is a member of the Australian Open Government Partnership forum and a guest lecturer at several Australian universities.